Information for the Teacher

Teachers should define and give examples of traits; personality characteristics.
Teachers should brainstorm with class and list names of great role models on the board in all areas. Gather best sources, both from the library and the internet.

Performance Assessment

Assessment Scenario

Think about any great people through history whom you might like to be for a day (not including entertainers or athletes): scientists, inventors, leaders, politicians, royalty, authors, artists, composers. Select one role model who possesses three traits which you wish to emulate in your life today. Now conduct research using the internet and/or library to find out what three traits made this person successful, and find out how you could emulate or imitate those traits in your own life.

Task 1: Bring in Three Sources and Works Cited

Each source should provide different information or different perspectives or opinions. Use the sites suggested in class, the database list, the public library, and the bookstore. Do not use a website written by an average person; instead, use professional sources only. Be critical of your sites: encyclopedias and “.gov” sites are most trustworthy, followed by known publishers, such as time.com, msnbc.com, newsweek.com; followed by those found in databases (proquest electroniclibrary.com or findarticles.com).

INTERNET WARNING: internet use must be supervised. Never give any information to anyone on the web. Be careful using search engines and links: some sites will be inappropriate and should not be visited, for obvious reasons. Never conduct searches for controversial topics on regular, unmoderated search engines (altavista, excite, yahoo) as they will find many sites which are invalid, inaccurate, or inappropriate.

Citations

Use at least three sources. Indent all lines except the first for each entry (the opposite of a paragraph), and alphabetize entries. This is the last page of the report.

a. For books, list the author’s name, title, city, publisher, and latest copyright date:

Kesselman-Turkel, Jan, and Frank Peterson. The Effect of Smoking on Adolescents. Chicago: Contemporary Books, 1991.

b. For articles from books, magazines, or newspapers, put the title in quotes, underline the source, then list the date and the page numbers for the entire article:

Article in a Periodical:
Smith, James. “What’s Wrong With Ecstasy?” Journal of Social Work in the Inner City. 27 Sept. 1993: 23-25.

Task 2: Take Notes (three paragraphs from three sources)

Take notes on your sources without plagiarizing by always writing the title and author before taking notes. Write notes either: 1. completely in your own words (without quotes); or 2. completely in the author's words, with quotes and the page number.

Steps to take to avoid plagiarism and take good notes:

1. Make sure the information is useful, valid, and relevant.
2. Write the title, author, date, web address (copy and paste it from the browser), and publisher and publication city for this source.
3. Read and find the most useful information, think about it, then write it in your own words in your own order. If you find a well-written short quote, you may copy it, but be sure to put quotation marks around it, then write down the page number. For example: “The impact of explicit lyrics can be seen in changes in behavior, and even in the blood makeup and brain activity of adolescents” (Smith, 342).

When taking notes from the Internet, make sure that you click to highlight the web address, then copy and paste it before taking any notes. Make sure that if you copy and paste any text that you put quotes around it immediately to avoid plagiarism and failing.

When summarizing in your own words, make sure your summary is accurate. Do not exaggerate what the author states. Use precise synonyms, and use a dictionary and thesaurus to help you.

- Clear when quoting or summarizing to avoid plagiarism.

2 Progressing

- Not all sources are clearly labeled.
- Not all details needed, some irrelevant notes or lacking relevant notes.
- Not always clear when summarizing or quoting.

1 Not meeting the standard(s)

- Incomplete, or not in correct format (above).
- Plagiarizing.

Task 3: Outline

Outline your research paper as you would an essay, I. A. B. C. to III. A. B. C. For example:

- I. First Part
 - A. FRIES showing that part (Source)
 - B. FRIES showing that part (Source)
 - C. FRIES showing that part (Source)

Each roman numeral represents a paragraph, and each letter a detail. Include the authors' names, which will be cited for each detail in your outline. Your report must have an introduction, a body, and a conclusion. There should therefore be a total of at least five paragraphs to the essay, including the introduction and conclusion.

Task 3: Scoring Guide

4 Exemplary

- Exceeds proficient level with higher quantity or quality.

3 Proficient

- Clear when quoting or summarizing to avoid plagiarism.

2 Progressing

- Not all sources are clearly labeled.
- Not all details needed, some irrelevant notes or lacking relevant notes.
- Not always clear when summarizing or quoting.
- Some incorrect outline formatting.

1 Not meeting the standard(s)

- Incomplete, or not in correct format (above).
- Plagiarizing.

Task 4: First Draft

Using your outline, write your first draft. There are three types of writing in a research paper:

1. Summarizing: when you show any unique information but you put it in your own words, you must still give the author's name in parentheses at the end of that sentence. If there is no page number, as on some websites, simply list the author's last name. If no author's name is given, which is rare, list the title in parentheses. For example: Smokers usually start smoking in middle or high school (James, 23). In fact, 24% of all smokers began smoking by the age of thirteen ("Smoking and Kids"). Only include the web site name if 2 or more articles have the same title. Web addresses should never be included in parenthetical citations. You may have as many parenthetical citations as you need; you could end almost every sentence with a parenthetical citation!

2. Quoting: quote a maximum of one sentence per paragraph, or three quoted sentences total per page -- the rest should be summarized and cited or entirely in your own words and phrases. Cite authors the same as above, but put quotes around all words directly copied, being sure to copy exactly, then give the author's name and page number. For example: "By conforming to their peer group, adolescents often take risks they would otherwise avoid" (Turwilliger and Jones, 232).

3. Original Writing: Use your own words as you would normally in an essay in the introduction, conclusion, and solution, and whenever you state generally accepted facts: Smoking is commonly seen as harmful to one's health.

- Not all sources are clearly labeled.
- Not all details needed, some irrelevant notes or lacking relevant notes.
- Not always clear when summarizing or quoting.
- Some incorrect outline formatting.

- Incomplete, or not in correct format (above).
- Plagiarizing.

Task 5: Peer Editing

Make sure mechanics, format, margins, bibliography, citations, and penmanship or typing are perfect. Ensure mature words and specific details are used throughout the paper.

Task 6: Final Draft

Final Draft Size: five paragraphs, minimum. The paper may be handwritten or typed. The title and heading are on the first page, not a separate page, with no extra spaces. “Works Cited” is the report’s last page. Make sure each page is numbered. Staple final copy, do not use finders, folders, or paperclips.

Packet to Hand in:

Top to Bottom:

- 1. Final draft
- 2. Works Cited (Final Draft)
- 3. Outline
- 4. Notes
- 5. Sources

Example Research Paper Paragraph:

Smith finds that censorship of explicit lyrics would be beneficial, “just as we censor liable, slander, threats, and obscene works” (342). Smith disagrees with those who state that children will listen to inappropriate music even if it is censored, since it would then be harder for children to find and hear. He agrees, therefore, with the work of the Parents Music Resources Center, but takes their work a step further, to total censorship (Smith, 349).

Task 6: Scoring Guide

4 Exemplary

- Five paragraphs are used, with an introduction, a different reason in each body paragraph, and a differently phrased conclusion.
- The essay is clear in meaning, yet is still highly creative, dramatic, emotionally powerful and logically persuasive.
- No errors in grammar, punctuation, or spelling occur in varied, mature, and complex sentences.
- Highly mature and varied words are used correctly with great precision.
- Many highly specific details with proper names and concrete nouns are used to prove and support your point.
- There is no plagiarism.
- All is in correct format.
- Each body paragraph contains at least one accurate citation.

3 Proficient

- Almost perfect.
- Same as a 4, but with a few small errors, less precision in mature and varied word choice.

2 Progressing

- Same as 3, but with a few more errors, or less precision, or fewer details or mature words, providing less support.
- May lose focus on answering the exact question briefly.
- Some errors may occur in format.

1 Not Meeting Standards

- Same as 2, but with more mistakes, less precision, less maturity, fewer supporting details; the focus may not be fully on answering the exact, entire question.
- Errors in paragraphs (more than one topic per paragraph, and/or missing paragraphs). Lacking support. Immature words or phrases.
- Disorganized.
- Several errors in mechanics.
- Plagiarism.
- Incorrect format.
